

Ancient Scribe

Game 10 July 1009

Although there has been no direct combat recently, the cut and thrust of diplomacy within the Empires is still strong. There is also a trend towards production of warships and fishing vessels, as the supply of food becomes tighter.

The control of the seas so that fishing can be safely carried out has become vital, and the seas appear to be changing hands rapidly, particularly in the Southern Ocean. We foresee a large naval clash in the near future, one which might decide the fishing rights in the near to medium future. With this food supply under the control of one Empire, it might swing the balance of power decisively one way or the other, and effect the land campaign in a way that may have not been clear in the past.

Jason's Bit

Welcome to the new players that have joined as a result of the website and my efforts to spread the word a bit further.

It might seem a bit quiet at the moment, but rest assured "there's trouble abrewing in them hills."

There are some powerful Empires scheming and planning their next moves, and it is only the need to get their logistics right that is holding them back.

On the subject of the website, you can now enter turns on the site, and then email them direct to me. The rules are also there as a download and a few hints and tips.

Ok, that's it for another month.

Regards Jason
