Game 12

May 1011

The Warlord Most Unclean has again been using his growing military muscle by marching from his recent acquisition at Begur to Sima, another independent village. Although his army had taken some casualties in the capture of Begur Another draft of fresh troops had arrived to fill the ranks and a numerically stronger army left Begur to march to Sima. On arrival in the area recon patrols were sent to the village. Scouts told the Warlord that the village remained unfortified and that the garrison was believed to be very weak. This confirmed recent intelligence from roving cavalry patrols. The army was roused from its brief rest and deployed for battle. The village, located on a mound looked ripe for the taking but as the Army approached they saw a large number of troops deploying to defend the settlement. This sight dismayed some of the attackers but Most Unclean rode in front of the ranks to rally their spirits. Shortly after they advanced upon the defenders. The battle lasted for an hour or more but it was plain to the attacking leaders that they had failed in their efforts. In late afternoon the signal was given to retreat. Hopefully for “Most Unclean” this will be a rare defeat.

Jason's Bit

I seemed to have missed a week, hence the lateness of the adjustment. Let me just say it did involve a Hospital but everything is ok now.

Last month I published trading offers but there was little response. I should have mentioned this of course. You can download the trading offers as a spreadsheet from the web site.

Regards Jason.
